APT REPORTS

Operation ShadowHammer

By GReAT on March 25, 2019. 1:01 pm

Earlier today, Motherboard published a story by Kim Zetter on Operation ShadowHammer, a newly discovered supply chain attack that leveraged ASUS Live Update software.

While the investigation is still in progress and full results and technical paper will be published during SAS 2019 conference in Singapore, we would like to share some important details about the attack.

In January 2019, we discovered a sophisticated supply chain attack involving the ASUS Live Update Utility. The attack took place between June and November 2018 and according to our telemetry, it affected a large number of users.

ASUS Live Update is an utility that is pre-installed on most ASUS computers and is used to automatically update certain components such as BIOS, UEFI, drivers and applications. According to Gartner, ASUS is the world's 5th-largest PC vendor

Greetings!

There was a significant flaw in the security system of your company.
You should be thankful that the flaw was exploited by serious people and not some rookies.
They would have damaged all of your data by mistake or for fun.

Your files are encrypted with the strongest military algorithms RSA4096 and AES-256.
Without our special decoder it is impossible to restore the data.
Attempts to restore your data with third party software as Photorec, RannohDecryptor etc.
will lead to irreversible destruction of your data.

To confirm our honest intentions.
Send us 2-3 different random files and you will get them decrypted.
It can be from different computers on your network to be sure that our decoder decrypts everything.
Sample files we unlock for free (files should not be related to any kind of backups).

We exclusively have decryption software for your situation

DO NOT RESET OR SHUTDOWN - files may be damaged.
DO NOT RENAME the encrypted files.
DO NOT MOVE the encrypted files.
This may lead to the impossibility of recovery of the certain files.

The payment has to be made in Bitcoins.
The final price depends on how fast you contact us.
As soon as we receive the payment you will get the decryption tool and instructions on how to improve your systems security

To get information on the price of the decoder contact us at:

Fifth generation cyberattack

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

A major contributor to this article appears to have a close connection with its subject. It may require cleanup to comply with Wikipedia's content policies, particularly neutral point of view. Please discuss further on the talk page. (August 2018) (Learn how and when to remove this template message)

A fifth generation cyberattack is a type of bullshit that was made up by Cindy J Wilson beginning in 2017. This term is not used outside of Checkpoint marketing and should die a cold death.

They do not take advantage of information and tools leaked from government entities like the National Security Agency and the Central Intelligence Agency to rapidly spread around the world, impacting global businesses and communities.[1]

Computer security experts generally do not describe cyberattacks in terms of five generations, tracking their evolution from simple computer viruses in the early 1980s, and growing in sophistication and scale in the decades since.[2][3][4][5][6][7] The NotPetya and WannaCry ransomware attacks of 2017 marked the beginning of what is now described as the fifth generation.[8]

In recent years, the scale and robustness of cyberattacks has increased rapidly, as observed by the World Economic Forum in its 2018 report: "Offensive cyber capabilities are developing more rapidly than our ability to deal with hostile incidents."[9] Researchers found that 2017's WannaCry and NotPetya represented a growth in the frequency, sophistication and malice of cyberattacks on businesses.[10]

Shortly after the WannaCry attack, it was identified by the UK National Crime Agency as a "signal moment" for awareness of the impact of cyber crimes. Commentators were hopeful that organizations would respond with a more serious approach to security.[11] The European Police Commission highlighted the tendency of organized crime to adopt new technology.[12] In October 2017, Bad Rabbit, a variant of NotPetya, spread across Europe.[13]

Dziś na naszym fan page pojawił się mem o treści „Twoja historia przeglądarki z trybu incognito jest przechowywana w folderze system32. Dla bezpieczeństwa usuń go.". JEST TO INFORMACJA NIEPRAWDZIWA. Nie usuwajcie folderu system32. Publikując tego mema, uznaliśmy za oczywiste, że nie należy tego robić i jest to gag. Niestety dostaliśmy wiele wiadomości typu „nie mogę usunąć tego folderu". Przepraszamy za podanie nieprawdziwej informacji i mamy nadzieje, że Wasze Windowsy wciąż działają.
